

FOOD SECURITY

Access to Income and Food Difficult for Sexual Assault Victims

ITEM	DETAILS
Sound FX	Ambient sound
Narration	The Democratic Republic of Congo has one of the highest rates of malnutrition in the world.
Interview	Response from Alex Nyarko, FAO Deputy Emergency Coordinator, Goma, Kivu, eastern DRC
Narration	Some of the most vulnerable people are women who have been sexually assaulted. Nineteen-year-old Sihusike's ability to get enough income and food changed after she was sexually abused by five soldiers. She was on her way home from the market.
Interview	Response from Sihusike, Rape Victim, Goma, Kivu, eastern DRC
Narration	The local non-governmental organization 'Synergie Des Femmes' is helping women like Sihusike in Kivu in eastern Congo. Germaine Chirigiri explains.
Interview	Response from Germaine Chirigiri, Synergie Des Femmes
Narration	The women and others receive help thanks to support from a 3-year European Union program. The E-U has donated 2.5 million euros to the Food and Agriculture Organisation to help vulnerable families improve their livelihoods. Women receive cassava plants, seeds, and tools for farming and other income-generating activities like fishing.
Interview	Response from Alex Nyarko, FAO Deputy Emergency Coordinator, Goma
Sound FX	Ambient sound

Reportage: Charlotte Windle (FAO)
 Script/Narration: Charmaine Wilkerson (FAO)
 Post-production: Riccardo Parenti (FAO)

October 2006